REVIEW OF THE ARTICLE

Economic Empowerment Of Small Land Holder

Prof. Maroti U. Tiple

ABSTRACT:

The problem statement was clear and well articulated This working paper will present a review on national and international policy initiatives that aim to empower small holders in markets. By policy initiatives we mean those plans and actions developed by national governments and international governing bodies that affect the Functioning of agricultural markets and defines the context within which the sales of agricultural products takes place, as well as those plans and actions that support small holders' economic organizations. As policy reforms are often long-term developments, the review will study changes in public policy and private responses over the last 15 years.

INTRODUCTION:

The introduction provides a good, generalized background of the topic that quickly gives the reader an appreciation The review will cover experiences in both OECD and developing countries. We will look for general patterns and processes in these policy initiatives and highlight the ways in which small holders and their economic organizations have been influenced by and reacted on these initiatives. The review will explicitly focus on the interaction between public policies and private responses. Initiatives of small holders' or generations themselves to influence the institutional environment will be included.
