ARTICLE REVIEW REPORT

Women In Medieval India: Conflicting Images Parallel Lives

Sugandha Rawat

ABSTRACT:

The problem statement was clear and well articulated. The cultural history of India bears testimony to the fact that theoretically women have been accorded the status of devi (Goddess) in our country. In Hindu religion God is shown as 'ardhanarishvara' or 'God who is half woman'. However, it is commonly agreed upon that the high status of women of the early Vedic period went on to deteriorate during the succeeding ages. Deterioration in women's condition is apparent in all periods following 1500 B.C. and became most visible in the wake of the Muslim invasion and occupation of our country during the 13th century.

INTRODUCTION:

The introduction provides a good, generalized background of the topic that quickly gives the reader an appreciation. The Medieval Period in the Indian context refers to the period between the 8th and the 18th century AD, which is further sub-divided into two periods: The early medieval (8th-13th century) and the late medieval (13th-18th century). In the present paper, we will be focusing on the late medieval period, i.e., 13th to 18th century. This period marked a steep deterioration in women's condition.

METHODOLOGY:

The author has not mentioned any specific methodology. This study was descriptive in nature. Must add methodology in your article. Methodology used to per research topic.

PRESENTATION OF RESULTS:

The amount of data presented was sufficient and appropriate. Tables, graphs, or figures were used judiciously and agree with the text. A careful perusal of textual and literary evidence enlightens us that how the freer Vedic women became more and more dependent on their male counterparts through the succeeding ages, getting oriented towards a restricted life and with their education getting almost banned, they came to be regarded as meager tools of pleasure for men with no intellectual merit and decision-making capacity.

REFERENCES:

Prior publication by the author(s) of substantial portions of the data or study was appropriately acknowledged.

RELEVANCE:

The study was relevant to the mission of the journal or its audience. The study addresses important problems or issues; the study was worth doing.
